Freezing weather discussed

by Sherry Turco
city editor

The heat is on as the cold sets in. Bowling Green set record temperatures Tuesday as the mercury plummeted to minus 15 degrees with a wind chill factor of minus 53.

According to experts, the best advice is to stay indoors, especially when the wind chill factor dips below minus 20 degrees. However, with classes in session, this is not always possible.

Many students braved the cold, while others felt it was in their best interest to stay bundled up in their dorm room or apartment.

University President Paul Olscamp said at Tuesday's Faculty Senate meeting that "so long as cold weather is the only problem at this campus, no classes will be canceled."

For those who are forced to brave the cold, warm clothes are an imperative part of facing the freezing weather.

"The idea of dressing warmly is to keep the core body temperature high," said Joshua Kaplan, director of student health services. "Especially the head, because much of the body heat can be lost through it."

Dressing warm is especially important because there is a moderate risk of frostbite with the wind chill factors that the city of Bowling Green has experienced this week.

"When considering outdoor clothing, students must protect their skin as much as possible," Kaplan said. "The most important part of the body to keep warm are hands and the ears."

Many people have called the student health center with symptoms of frostbite that have occurred from walking to classes. "We have seen several cases of mild frostbite, all of them occurring to people's ears," Kaplan said.

According to Bob Martin, vice president of operations at the University, there is no set guideline that the University relies on to make the decision on whether to close.

"We have one policy. We either stay open or we close, which means that nobody except emergency personnel work," Martin said. "Certain activities must go on. Students must eat and the pipes cannot freeze."

The procedure to decide whether or not the University is closed begins at 6 a.m.

"If the weather the night before is extremely bad, I discuss with my staff whether or not we should close the University," Martin said.

Two major factors that are part of the decision are the wind chill factor and the availability of the highways.

"About half of the students commute, which makes the roadways a major part of our decision," Martin said.

After the staff meets, Martin then makes a call to Olscamp and they discuss the information Martin's staff has provided.

"Paul Olscamp makes the final decision on whether or not to close the University," Martin said.

Another factor that figures into the decision of closing the University is lack of heat and power outages. "Yesterday, all the buildings were heated adequately," he said. "However, we did have a small problem in University Hall and on the third floor of West Hall."

Toledo resident shot on campus

by Tara Stubbs
News staff writer

When two Toledo residents prepared for a dance which took place in the University's Lenhart Grand Ballroom Friday night, little did they know what the night had in store for them.

Twenty year-old Jamie L. Johnson, a resident of Toledo was shot allegedly by another Toledo resident, Ronald Perryman, at 2:30 a.m. Saturday morning after attending a dance at the University Union.

Both men involved were reportedly students of the University of Toledo.

✓ 3:30 a.m. University police notified of shooting that occurred near the Education Building and Moseley Hall.

According to Cliff Boutelle, University Director of Public Relations, the dance was being sponsored as a sort of "welcome back after the winter vacation."

Boutelle said the two students apparently knew each other. The incident occurred somewhere near the Education Building and Moseley.

"One pulled out a .22 caliber handgun and fired three shots into the ground and then one shot at the victim," Boutelle said.

The bullet struck Johnson in the upper-arm. Not figuring the wound to be serious, he drove back home to Toledo. However,

Jerome Library hosts King panel

by Melissa Lipowski
News staff writer

University students and faculty members who were willing to face the bitter cold temperatures had the opportunity to participate in the commemoration of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Tuesday afternoon in the conference room of the Jerome Library.

The presentation, entitled "Eye to Eye with MLK," featured a panel of University administrators and faculty members who reinforced the important messages that King attempted to emphasize and their continuing relevance in contemporary society.

Instead of only focusing on the historical perspective of King, the program made an attempt to illustrate his diversity, said Marshall Rose, the director of Affirmative Action and one of the panelists.

"Martin Luther King Jr. has often been misinterpreted and misrepresented as a disengaged, pacifist dreamer," Rose said. "But he was more than a dreamer. He was a leader for justice."

Because most University students have only had the Iran-Contra case comes to close by Pete Yost

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- President Reagan acquiesced in a coverup of the Iran-Contra scandal that was spearheaded by Attorney General Edwin Meese and carried out at the top levels of the Reagan administration, the prosecutor concluded in his final report Tuesday.

In two volumes that were immediately denounced by Reagan, Meese, ex-President Bush and others, the Iran-Contra prosecutor declared that Reagan's aides withheld information on the scandal from prosecutors and Congress.

Impeachment of Reagan "certainly should have been considered" by the congressional committees investigating the Iran-Contra affair, Independent Counsel Lawrence Walsh told a news conference.

Reagan called Walsh's report a "vehicle for baseless accusations that he could never have proven in court."

Walsh criticized Bush's pardons of ex-Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and five other Iran-Contra figures as either "an act of friendship or an act of self-protection." The pardons were issued on Christmas Eve 1992, two weeks before the scheduled start of Weinberger's criminal trial.

"President Reagan, the secretary of state, the secretary of defense and the director of central intelligence and their necessary assistants committed themselves, however reluctantly," to secretly arming the Nicaraguan Contras and to dealing arms to Iran to gain release of Americans held hostage in the Middle East, Walsh's report said.

"They skirted the law; some of them broke the law, and almost all of them tried to cover up the president's willful activities," Walsh's report concluded.

Walsh's report said that there was "no credible evidence that President Reagan violated any criminal statute."

"Nevertheless, he set the stage for the illegal activities of others by encouraging and in general terms ordering" military aid to the Contra rebels in Nicaragua at a time when Congress banned such aid, the report said.

When the Iran arms sales became public in 1986, Reagan "knowingly participated or at least acquiesced in the efforts" of his top aides to cover up Reagan's prior approval of a November 1985 delivery of Hawk missiles to Iran, which Reagan's aides feared had been illegal, the report said.

Walsh said he discovered the coverup when he found the notes of ex-White House chief of staff Don Regan and Weinberger in 1992. Regan was a participant in the coverup, but he readily cooperated with Walsh beginning in 1992, the report concluded.

facts," the report stated.

Reagan's White House Counsel Peter Wallison "raised concerns about a conflict of interest" in having Meese, a presidential appointee, investigate a White House matter, the report said. Wallison also expressed unhappiness to Regan with a public assertion by the administration that all laws had been complied with, the report said. Referring to this protest, Wallison wrote in his diary, "I was told that this is what the AG wanted said."

Walsh said there was circumstantial evidence Reagan was aware that Iran arms sale proceeds were diverted to the Contras.

Skater should not compete

When members of an Olympic team are selected, it is not only because they are among the best in their respective sports, but because the Olympic Committee believes they are the athletes who will best represent their country. In this sense, the Olympian is a diplomat. Citizens of other countries see the Olympian as a representative sampling of what the Olympian's homeland has to offer.

There is no exception in the United States. Figures such as Jesse Owens, Bruce Jenner, Dorothy Hamill and Mary Lou Retton have not only scored big in the Olympics, but have given the world an image of American athletes as intense competitors who perform well under pressure, win with pride and lose with dignity.

And purveying that image is no difficult task. An Olympian simply must give their best effort, hold their head high and be glad just to have made it to a pinnacle most athletes only dream of reaching. When the topic of loss of integrity in sports is brought up, the Olympic Games are not even thought of amidst the rubble of free agency and multi-million dollar contract negotiations that currently plague professional athletics.

However, when U.S. figure skater Nancy Kerrigan was maliciously attacked earlier this month in what has become a much-publicized case, the integrity of the Olympic Games was threatened. When it was disclosed that Kerrigan's teammate/rival, Tonya Harding, may have been somewhat responsible for the attack, the integrity of the Games suffered yet another blow. Now, the Olympic Committee must decide whether or not Harding should be disqualified from competing in this year's winter Olympiad.

Granted, Harding's role in the attack, if any, has not been proven in a court of law or in any official forum and, according to one of the principles this country was founded on, she is innocent until proven guilty. Nonetheless, an Olympiad where the biggest news item is who is at odds with whom on the U.S. figure skating team would not be one for anyone involved to be proud of.

For the sake of the last remaining drop of sports integrity, Harding should abstain from participating in the upcoming Olympiad and allow the current media blitz to fade out.

A rebirth through television

I'm a voyeur with a vision. With keen insight and a gift for introspection, I sit and stare my days away with the wisest of companions, the window to the world, the jeweled eye of the late twentieth century - my television.

How I came to be what I am, I owe to my television. In television, I see the great human issues of our day and night played out in magnificent splendor. I seek these out with hungry eyes, and then come away with revelation and knowledge.

The first thing about my experience with television is I learned that it is a hard tutor. Much like the sages or the shamans, it accepts you only on its own terms, with much preconditioning and mental, physical and emotional preparation. Don't ask me how. It might seem as simple as going down to the store and buying yourself a set, or, as may be the case for most of us, we're simply born into its world. Television demands no less than a complete surrender of the senses and the mind. I gave up my world for television, and what a false world that was, but now look at me ... I'm happy.

It's hard to say what has widened my horizon the most, the Menendez trial, the Buttafuoco revivals, the Waco tragedy or the Sunday night true-life adventures. You see, it is precisely this aspect of television that makes it so compelling. The murder, the drama, it's all so real! See, they say so themselves. I say television calls for the complete abandoning of past experience. It is a ritualistic purification that allows one to see reality as it truly is, with all its psychopaths, good guys gone wrong and lots and lots of blood and gore.

At the risk of getting excessively autobiographical, let me describe some of my own experiences in coming into this sacramental vision. When I came here in search of higher education and life experience and all that, little did I realize that my curriculum would have little to do with it. My real education began on the day I went out and, with nothing more than a couple of hundred dollars and some good fortune, was allowed by my television to purchase it and bring it home. If I was more familiar with the rituals of my more religiously oriented ancestors, I would probably have spewed sacred incantations, similar to the way the deity would be ceremonially installed in a temple back home.

Anyway, with respect and humility, I installed the set in my bedroom (no shoes please, this is now a consecrated place) and struggled to find an outlet on the wall behind the dresser. In the instant that the picture came to life, I was born again.

The first sacrifice, no I won't call it that, for it implies some sort of condescension on my part, the first gift I received from the TV was this: a clean and complete negation of my past including all the stories and maps I carried around in my head so that I could tell people where I was from and hold on to my identity. Nothing. The world didn't exist anymore. The great Atlantic crossing, twenty years in my old country, all the ambition and the dreams, nothing mattered. I was here now, in the light of the screen all my sins were washed away.

I had really been an idiot all along; living in the dark, literally, surrounded by insects and lizards, grandmothers' tales, mosquitoes and monsoons and big fat books which never meant a thing. Even the poor excuse of a TV set that we had back there, with all its development-oriented imagery and boring, garrulous politicians, was a false god. I had imagined, all along, that I lived in a far-off country which was one of the largest and culturally diverse ones in the world. It had its problems, poverty and its periodic pessimism, but it had enormous hope and with its rich history and culture would certainly rise to a better future and contribute smilingly to international understanding and peace.

Then, I was enlightened. The television told me that I had been fooled all along. The place I had called my own had never existed. In fact, I had never existed at all, at least not in the way I had supposed. There was just this endless, wonderful expanse of real-life drama and courtroom suspense. Whatever the name may have been; sitcom, true-life adventure, the news, investigative reporting, whatever, it was all the same thing: the same many-faced nature of the Divine Unity. Beyond this, all that seemed to be was a dark, sad, ambiguous borderline entity called The Third World, notable for its occasional earthquake, coup or human misery. It was also a lovely metaphor. In fact, the television said yesterday that the Southern California quake had left the place looking like a "Third World disaster."

I now know I gave up an illusion. Now, I really know what the world is like. I know exactly what is of consequence and what is not. I'm kind and generous, so I can think of an occasional civil war in the distance and feel compassion, but I can't really be bothered by all that. The pictures are fine, but it gets irritating when falsely-led people sneak into the television and talk politics in great depth for a whole hour. That isn't the sacred reality we have been offered here.

It's a dark and confusing world, when you buy all the wrong definitions. The television has shown me the way, and it has given me a sense of order in the great chaos beyond. The only thing of importance now is a brilliant and intriguing drama involving a couple of figure skaters and a body-guard and the promise of a long and fascinating trial.

A shot at the olympic gold

Should Tonya Harding remain on the U.S. Olympic team?

How can a team work its best knowing that someone on it may have sabotaged another teammate?

They can't. Nancy Kerrigan is not going to be able to perform her best knowing that the person who may have tried to sabotage her chances of getting in the Olympics is now her teammate.

Whether or not it can be proven Tonya Harding is the sole connection in the vicious attack against Kerrigan, she should not be allowed to compete. It has already been implied that Harding was responsible for the attack and unless someone else can be implicated in the matter, it could have profound effects on the team.

The Olympic games may seem to be a competition between Kerrigan and Harding, but the big picture is that it's a competition between the U.S. and other countries. Decisions have to be made for the good of the whole team. Whether Kerrigan or Harding win, they are both winners as a team.

A conflict between Kerrigan and Harding is a drastic downfall to the team and the only way to solve it is to keep Harding off the team and find a replacement.

It doesn't matter whether it's moral or not to keep Harding off the team without proof. The harm has already been done to the team, now something has to be done to make sure the U.S. team is psychologically fit for competition, so Harding must go. Her bodyguard has already confessed to be involved, it seems it's likely she's involved anyway - so the U.S. shouldn't waste any tears fearing some moral wrong has been done to Harding if she does get booted.

Robin Coe is a guest columnist for The BG News.

Innocent until proven guilty.

This single ideology is the foundation upon which our legal system is based and the very threads upon which we should be formulating our opinions. This must be kept in mind when making a decision on whether Tonya Harding remains on the olympic figure skating team.

To date, Harding has not been found guilty of conspiring to eliminate her teammate Nancy Kerrigan. Even though her bodyguard has admitted to hiring a hitman to disable Kerrigan, it has not been proven that Harding has had any involvement whatsoever.

Guilt by association should also not be a platform on which to drop Harding from the olympic team. Harding is a talented figure skater and her abilities, combined with those of Kerrigan, are a formula for gold and silver.

Even if Kerrigan had not been injured and would have competed in the national championships, Harding, through her own hard work and natural ability, would have earned a spot on the olympic team and a trip to Lillehammer.

Harding has expressed her belief that she is at least as talented as Kerrigan, if not more so. Why would someone with so much confidence jeopardize her own reputation, self-respect or her olympic chances to remove her competition?

As it stands, Harding's involvement has not been substantiated. She has not been proven guilty of any involvement or of any knowledge of Kerrigan's beating. The only aspect of this whole situation that is still factual is she has earned a spot, through competition, on the olympic team.

Porn star wins custody battle

NEW YORK — Porn star Ilona "Cicciolina" Staller won the right to see her 14-month-old son in a custody battle imported from Italy.

Staller, also a former member of the Italian Parliament, is fighting her estranged husband, artist Jeffrey Koons, for the child. Koons snatched him from Staller's home in Rome on Christmas Eve and brought him to New York.

A state Supreme Court justice ruled Friday that Staller can visit the boy, Ludwig, while the couple await a Jan. 26 custody hearing. Koons has filed for divorce. The two married in 1991.

Koons said he took the boy because Staller broke a promise not to make any more X-rated movies and because he found a sex toy among Ludwig's playthings. Staller's lawyer denied the allegations.

Staller was a member of Parliament from 1987 to 1992 and once offered Saddam Hussein an evening of sex in exchange for hostages.

chance to learn the little that schools teach them about King, his message has been lost on an entire generation, Rose said.

"Martin Luther King Jr. has become more mythological than real," he said. "History often portrays individuals as heroes and King has become a hero encased in perfection."

When discussing King, it is important to focus on the importance of his messages rather than his appealing attributes that the schools want students to know, said Lorna Gonzales Pinto, one of the panelists.

Because King was a man of social action, he could be used as a role model for improvement in all aspects of life, Gonzales-Pinto said.

"People should remember Martin Luther King Jr. how he would want to be remembered — as a man of action and achievement," Rose said. "He was a drum major for peace, justice and opportunity."

Professor earns service award

by Robin Coe
News staff writer

A University professor emeritus of mathematics and statistics was honored for his dedication as a professor and member of the Mathematical Association of America.

Clifford A. Long was honored with the MAA's Certificate of Meritorious Service for his service as president for the Ohio Section in 1980-81 and Section Governor from 1988-91. He was also awarded for his participation in panel discussions, presenting papers and arranging meetings and short courses for the organization.

According to Thomas Hern, the president of the MAA, Long was a member of the MAA for 35 years and has always displayed a willingness to help within the organization. Hern said that he showed great deal of consistency and selflessness as a member.

He is also interested in further pursuing mathematical-aided designs that construct sculptures, he said. He discusses the method in numerical analysis classes to an extent, but hopes that mathematics will become a bigger part in art at the university.

Long added that he has enjoyed being a part of the MAA.

"It's a real privilege to work with unselfish people dedicated to mathematics, its teaching and its students," Long said.

Long received his Bachelor's, Master's and Doctorate degrees from the University of Illinois and has been a pioneer in the mathematics of computer-aided geometric design and the role of computers, graphics and visualization in the teaching of mathematics.

"He doesn't do things for his own self, he does it for the good of the organization, teaching and the students," Hern said. "He's not in it for the glory."

Long said he will continue to contribute to the association and lecture the supplemental three years beyond retirement in mathematics and statistics at the University.

City Council to improve gateway

by Jonathan Broadfoot
News staff writer

If the city's request for a grant is approved, travelers will no longer drive through Bowling Green without doing a double take.

A resolution was adopted by City Council Tuesday night requesting a grant to improve and beautify the entrance to Bowling Green between Mercer Road and the I-75 overpass.

The proposed project, recommended by the BG Leadership Alumni sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, includes a new welcome sign, mounding, plantings, sidewalks along the south side of East Wooster Street and underground wiring of GTE and city electric lines.

The Alumni Committee, which proposed the concept of improving the city's gateway, is chaired by Lee Hake.

Under the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act (ISTEA), the federal government through the Ohio Department of Transportation will provide 80 percent of the construction costs.

Twenty percent of the total cost of the funding must be furnished by the City of Bowling Green, according to John Mura, Fourth Ward council member.

Wes Hoffman, mayor of Bowling Green, and the City Council believe the ISTEA program -- whose purpose is to enhance aesthetics and the environment -- is a profitable way to improve the east gateway to Bowling Green.

One objective of the city council is to "create a more favorable image to the east entrance of the city," said Thomas Anderson, At-Large council member.

once back in Toledo, he decided the wound was serious enough to go to the Medical College of Ohio, where he was treated and released.

Boutelle said Johnson identified the person who shot him as Perryman, a 19-year-old fellow UT student. Johnson proceeded to file charges with the Toledo Police department who then contacted University police.

Boutelle said University police were unaware the incident even occurred. They did not become aware until around 3:30 a.m. when they were notified by the Toledo police department. The University police then issued a warrant for the arrest of the alleged perpetrator.

On Tuesday afternoon, Perryman was apprehended by the Toledo police. He was then transferred into the custody of University police and placed into the Wood County Justice Center.

The bond for Perryman was set at $25,000.

Woman may be Roof collapses on teen running mate Snow-covered ceiling leads to death of adolescent

The Associated Press

COLUMBUS — Gov. George Voinovich's spokesman would not discuss published reports Tuesday that said Voinovich would choose a woman to be his running mate.

"I'm not confirming or denying anyone on the list on or off the record," said spokesman Mike Dawson.

The Cincinnati Post, quoting sources it did not identify, said former Marietta Mayor Nancy Hollister would be the first-term Republican governor's choice for lieutenant governor.

The Lima News quoted Republican legislative leaders as saying they expected Voinovich to choose Hollister.

Voinovich is expected to announce Thursday that Hollister will run with him on the Republican ticket in the May primary, The Post said.

Hollister is director of the governor's office of Appalachia, a branch of the Ohio Department of Development. She did not return a message left at her office Tuesday. There is no listing for her in Marietta.

State Rep. Randall Gardner, R-Bowling Green, and the minority whip, told the Lima newspaper he had heard Voinovich's choice would be a woman.

"She's the leading candidate," he said of Hollister.

Hollister would be the first woman to serve as Ohio's lieutenant governor. She would succeed Lt. Gov. Mike DeWine, who is running for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by Democrat Howard Metzenbaum.

MIDDLEFIELD, Ohio — A snow-covered roof collapsed on an apartment-complex swimming pool Monday, killing a 14-year-old boy and trapping his cousin in the water, the police chief said.

Rickey E. Wilson was trying to climb out of the pool when the collapse occurred about 4:45 p.m., Chief David Easton said.

Two teen-age family members who were watching Rickey and his 6-year-old cousin swim heard the flat, wooden-truss roof begin to collapse, Easton said. The two girls told police the roof fell in an instant, he said.

"They heard three loud bangs like somebody was pounding on the roof, then it just cracked and fell in," Easton said.

The girls, one of whom had an 18-month-old baby in her arms, were standing in the pool doorway as the roof began to give way, Easton said. They were able to jump out of the way of the falling debris, although one girl injured her ankle. She was treated at the scene, Easton said.

The names and relationships of the others at the pool were not released.

Neither boy was able to climb out of the pool, but the 6-year-old was pulled out by apartment Manager Don Heidelberg. He was not injured, Easton said.

Rescue workers needed an hour to pull Rickey from the debris. He was pronounced dead at Geauga Community Hospital in Chardon, Easton said.

An autopsy was scheduled for Tuesday. Easton said he was not sure of the pool's dimensions, but said it was less than "Olympic size." Rickey was found in the shallow end of the pool where water depth was about three feet, he said.

About five inches of snow fell in Middlefield on Monday.

The village is about 30 miles east of Cleveland in the "snow belt," a region where storms are intensified by the climactic effects of Lake Erie. Since Christmas, as much as three feet of snow has accumulated in some areas.

"We've had some snow, but the manager said there was no more snow on that roof than on any other," Easton said.

Calls to Heidelberg Monday night were not answered. Easton said he was uncertain whether the snow caused the roof to collapse.

Lock put on mayor's office

TOLEDO — When Carty Finkbeiner was elected mayor, he pledged an open administration.

But Finkbeiner said he never promised an open door leading to his office.

A combination lock has been placed on a door leading to Finkbeiner's office for "confidentiality purposes" and to "control traffic patterns," the mayor said Tuesday.

"I wanted to protect the individuals who have confidential papers on their desks from the eyes of everybody," Finkbeiner said.

"It's extremely important we do things in a businesslike manner, and that does not mean every Tom, Dick and Harry who comes up to the 22nd floor has the right to go through my desk or read what is on administrative desks and return to the street level and circulate that information. I have no objection if they stop by or request time," he said.

The city also locked the door leading to the mayor's office for security reasons.

Man may be jailed if fees not paid

TOLEDO — Bill Hughlett loves raising dogs. The unemployed Vietnam Veteran said his 27 dogs keep him "clean and sober."

Hughlett, 44, of Toledo, lives in his mother's one-story home and receives about $115 a month in welfare. He uses almost all of his money on dog food.

He does not have enough money to pay for dog licenses and rabies shots. He has not had a steady job since he was laid off eight years ago from an auto parts plant.

If Hughlett does not get that taken care of soon, he could be fined $525 and go to jail.

"Raising the dogs help me keep away from alcohol and drugs," Hughlett said in an interview.

"They keep me clean and sober. It's my way of letting things out, you know, the frustration, aggravation. If I get depressed or something, I grab one of my dogs, hug 'em and just let it all out."

Hughlett last week was issued 21 citations for violating the city's dog ordinance, Lucas County Dog Warden Thomas Skeldon said. He is scheduled to appear in Municipal Court on Friday.

Hughlett faces a maximum sentence of $25 and 30 days in jail for each count.

The warden investigated Hughlett after a neighbor complained about the animals. Hughlett started taking in the dogs last year.

"If he gets them their shots, if he gets them spayed and neutered and if he gets the licenses, I'm willing to go to court with him and stand up next to him and say, 'Judge, he's complied with this,'" Skeldon said.

But Hughlett said he does not have the money. It costs $10 for a license and $15 for each rabies shot. It would cost $675 to get licenses and shots for his dogs.

"I don't know what I'm going to do. I wish the county would give me the shots for free. I'm willing to pay them back a little at a time," Hughlett said.

Skeldon said the dogs are treated well.

California aftershocks continue Offices, schools close after quake jolts region

by James Anderson
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES -- Under skies as bright and blue as ever, Southern Californians confronted a changed world Tuesday.

The defining features of this region's life -- water, power and freeways -- were suddenly uncertain. In their place: long lines, hellish commutes and constant earthquake aftershocks.

A 16th body was found inside a flattened apartment building in Northridge, near the epicenter of Monday's powerful earthquake, bringing the death toll from the quake to 34.

"The days ahead will also be rough for us," Mayor Richard Riordan warned Angelenos, even as he praised them for a cool-headed response to the crisis. "Let's all stick together."

A snapshot of a region in crisis Tuesday:

Many offices, schools and stores were closed, and workers were urged to stay home. The closure of four of the nation's busiest freeways still made commuting a frustrating adventure.

Aftershocks, some as strong as five on the Richter scale, continued to jolt the region.

About 100,000 homes remained without power, and between 50,000 and 100,000 were without water, almost all of them in the hard-hit San Fernando Valley. The Department of Water and Power said it could be a week or more before water was restored.

About 20,000 people were camping in parks, the Department of Parks and Recreation said.

About 100 building engineers and inspectors fanned out across the damaged area, but no preliminary estimate on the number of buildings damaged was immediately available.

More than 2,000 National Guard soldiers were mobilized; many could be seen patrolling the San Fernando Valley, guns at their sides.

After a dusk-to-dawn curfew, police reported about 75 arrests overnight for crimes such as robbery and curfew violation.

California Governor Pete Wilson answered questions outside the crushed apartment building in Northridge.

"Unfortunately, it is going to be a major, major inconvenience," Wilson said. He said it would take up to a year to rebuild fallen bridges that carry Interstate 10, the Santa Monica freeway, over surface streets in Los Angeles.

Several hundred thousand people a day use the Santa Monica Freeway, making it the nation's busiest highway. Near the fallen bridges Tuesday morning, traffic crawled on Fairfax Avenue at a rate of about four blocks per hour.

Late in the morning, huge construction cranes began tearing down sections of the freeway, biting cracks into the concrete slabs and lifting them away.

The quake also collapsed sections of Interstates 5 and 14, and state Route 118. The closure of Interstate 5, the major north-south highway on the West Coast, left truckers stranded in the San Joaquin Valley north of Los Angeles and gave a hint of the economic reverberations of the quake.

In the San Fernando Valley, the 60-square-mile suburban expanse most badly damaged by the quake, many people stayed home to clean up and take stock. That kept commuting problems to a minimum. Those who ventured out in their cars had to negotiate a crazy tangle of detours around cracked residential streets and flooded areas. A few opted for mass transit. "I was kind of surprised that it was so uncrowded," said Scott Draper, Los Angeles, a city analyst who lives in Glendale and took the train.

Ohio man violates probation by posing

by John Nolan

CINCINNATI -- A man who served two years in prison for impersonating a doctor was convicted Tuesday of violating his probation by posing as a lawyer.

Thomas D. West, 35, of Erlanger, Ky., could be sent back to prison to serve 10 to 15 years that were suspended after his 1991 conviction, a Hamilton County probation officer said.

He is to be sentenced Jan. 25 in Hamilton County Common Pleas Court.

West declined to comment after the hearing. He was taken back to the county jail to await sentencing.

"I think he needs to feel important," Cheryl Brown, the private investigator who alerted probation officers to West's lawyer ruse, said after the hearing. "I think he needs some psychiatric help."

Judge John Keefe found West guilty after hearing testimony that West identified himself to Brown and another private investigator as a Cincinnati lawyer and tried to hire them.

Brown said that he wanted them to investigate a Kentucky state senator that West claimed opposed a juvenile justice center project West was trying to get built in northern Kentucky. West never identified the senator.

Women's hoops on a roll

Hot shooting has helped Lady Falcons blow through MAC

by Marty Fuller
News sports writer

TOs to TOs. Turnovers to time outs.

That seems to be the key to victory for the BG women's basketball team. The Falcon squad creates the turnovers, transforms them into points and forces their opposition to call time outs.

In last week's defeats of MAC rivals, Ball State and Miami, the Falcons forced 26 turnovers each game. Tomorrow the BG club, 9-3 overall and 3-1 in MAC play, will look to do the same against Western Michigan, 8-4 overall and 2-2 in conference contests. The Falcons will scrap with the Broncos in Kalamazoo, Mich., at the Red Fieldhouse at 5:30 today.

The Broncos, coached by Pat Charity, are coming off a 63-61 defeat at the hands of the Central Michigan Chippewas.

"We need to improve on defense, rebounding and our experienced players need to take more leadership. We also have to have other players emerge to give Kina Brown more help in the scoring department," Charity said.

Last year Brown, the Broncos junior forward, averaged 15.1 points a game, 7.7 rebounds and led the MAC with 1.1 rejections per game. She is already Western Michigan's career leader for free throws and has scored in double digits in 48 of her 54 career games.

Leading the way for the Falcons are junior Michelle Shade and seniors, Tangy Williams and Lori Albers.

Shade is coming off one of her best games of the year. Her contribution of 22 points, 7 rebounds and 3 assists helped the Falcons down Miami last weekend.

Since Albers return from a knee injury she has scored 27 point, snagged 16 boards, and dished out 11 assists in three games.

Williams, the Falcon center, stepped up her game last week hitting 7 of 11 shots from the field while on the defensive end she added 4 steals.

The height of Shade, Albers and Williams will be needed to counter the rebounding skills of the Broncos, who lead the MAC in rebounding margin with a plus 8.5 mark. Another key for the BG club will be to maintain their hot shooting from the field. The BG women are averaging 91.5 points a game in league play and have shot 50 percent or better from the field in three of four MAC games.

Mixed team splits matches

by Garrett Walkup
News Sports writer

The tennis team got back into the swing of things last weekend. (Boy, was that bad.) Three of the ladies and two of the men competed in a one day MAC, plus Kalamazoo College indoor tournament at Western Michigan last Saturday.

The players looked to check out the competition as conference play approaches. Team BG went into the tournament seated seventh out of the eight teams. The Falcons were not expected to do well, but the team had other ideas, namely upset, and to show that they are for real.

Their first match was against number two seated Kalamazoo College who was looking to walk all over BG. BG dropped the first two matches to them, and then came back in grand style to take the next three matches and defeat Kalamazoo.

BG was down after the first four matches against Kalamazoo. But just as the fat lady was about to sing for BG, clutch play from the mixed doubles pairing of Erin Bowbeer, and Mark Ciochetto brought them back, and sent the fat lady to a weight watchers clinic. Junior Erin "Bobbitt" Bowbeer and sophomore Mark Ciochetto won their match, their overtime, and their supertiebreaker to put BG over the top, and upset second ranked Kalamazoo.

"It was a very tiring match, but it was also exciting, it wasn't like anything I have been in before," Bowbeer said.

The win put BG into the semifinals against Eastern Michigan. The thrilling, but long day finally caught up to the the Falcons as they dropped four of the five matches to EMU. The play of sophomore Mark Ciochetto and freshman Joel Terman kept the team solid. Terman had the only BG victory against EMU, and had a record of 3-1 for the tournament.

Head women's coach Penny Dean was impressed overall with her team's play, especially from the younger players, but she sees lots of room for improvement.

"I wouldn't say we are rusty, but it is obvious our skills need to be sharpened through practice," Dean said.

Sophomore Patty Bank was also pleased with the play of the team and the with the whole tournament. "It was tough to get in to the matches because they were only one set, but it was also great because we had lots of crowd support," Banks said.

Men travel to red-hot WMU

by Andy Dugan
News sports writer

The men's basketball team travels to Kalamazoo, Mich. today in hopes of bumping Western Michigan out of its shared first place conference standing.

Western Michigan and BG, along with Eastern Michigan and Miami are currently in a four-way tie at the top of the Mid-American Conference, with marks of 3-1.

The Broncos will be led by senior Leon McGee, who is second in the Mid-American Conference in scoring with an average of 21.8 points per game. McGee is also shooting 56.9 from the field.

Western Michigan has won nine of its last 10 games. The Broncos have also held eight of 13 opponents this season under 40 percent shooting from the field, including conference teams Ohio University (34.6) and Central Michigan (37.0).

The Falcons will rely on their defense, as it is giving up only 62.8 in conference action. In Saturday's game against Miami, BG kept the Redskins to a season-low 59 points.

BG will look to leading scorers Shane Kline-Ruminski and Shane Komives for collecting major points. Komives is the only player for the Falcons who has scored in double figures in each of the four conference games thus far.

Another major contributor will be James Cerisier, who has been named Mid-American Conference/Ford Player of the Week. Cerisier scored 32 points and had eight rebounds in BG's win against Ball State (70-69) last week, and against Miami (74-59). The junior forward made 12 of 16 shots from the field and 8 of 10 attempts from the free throw line. In the Ball State game, Cerisier scored 15 points and two rebounds and shot 77.8 percent from the free throw line.

Stadium damaged as result of quake

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - The "Big A" sign inside the stadium is down. The scoreboard and giant replay screen are in ruins.

Anaheim Stadium sustained about $3.4 million in damages Monday from the earthquake that rocked Los Angeles.

The stadium, home of the California Angels and Los Angeles Rams, is farther from the quake's epicenter than most of the Los Angeles area's stadiums and arenas. Yet, it was the only one to incur significant damage.

Bret Colson, an Anaheim city spokesman, said there will be a big bill to foot because the insurance deductible is $6.25 million, meaning the damages will not be covered.

Anaheim is some 30 miles from downtown Los Angeles and about 50 miles from where the quake was centered in Northridge.

The new Anaheim Arena, about a mile from Anaheim Stadium and home of the NHL's Mighty Ducks, had no apparent damage.

"We were able to weather it very well," said John Nicoletti, spokesman for the arena. "The building is built structurally sound. Everything is fine."

Nearer the epicenter of the quake, which measured 6.6 on the Richter scale, were Dodger Stadium, the Los Angeles Coliseum and Sports Arena, all near downtown Los Angeles, the Rose Bowl in Pasadena and the Forum in Inglewood. All apparently had no major damage.

The Sacramento Kings-Los Angeles Lakers game Monday afternoon was postponed because of the mayhem.

"It's the scariest feeling I've ever had," Sacramento forward Wayman Tisdale said.

"Two thoughts came to mind," said Kings coach Garry St. Jean. "One, is the building going to collapse? Two, what about my family?"

At Santa Anita, 20 miles from Northridge, the special Martin Luther King Jr. Day racing program went on as scheduled and drew a crowd of 19,001.

Jane Goldstein, director of communications for Santa Anita, said the track, with a rare Monday racing date because of the holiday, sustained "only superficial, cosmetic-type damage, a little plaster down."

The quake kept Roger Stein home, but the horse he trains, 11-1 shot Southern Truce, still won the $160,600 Santa Monica Handicap by a half length over Arches of Gold.

"A Grade I race and I'm not even there," Stein said when informed by a Santa Anita employee of Southern Truce's victory.

Asked if that was the best news he'd heard all day, Stein replied, "You're not kidding."

Stein didn't go to the track because of damage at his home in Woodland Hills, near the epicenter.

One visiting team's players were more than happy to leave Southern California on Monday after the quake.

The Vancouver Canucks were staying at a hotel near downtown Los Angeles after beating the Mighty Ducks 4-3 Sunday night.

"I didn't know what it was at first, but my roommate is Jimmy Carson (former Los Angeles King) and he said right away it was an earthquake," Canucks captain Trevor Linden said after returning to Vancouver. "The whole bed was shaking and the noise was really loud. It was a nice feeling getting on that plane and coming home again."

A college team that was out of town during the quake the Cal State Northridge men's basketball team cut its road trip short. The Matadors, who lost 100-85 at Colorado on Monday night, decided to return home and postpone Wednesday's game against Air Force at Colorado Springs.

"I don't think anybody wants to be here right now, as beautiful as Boulder is, as Colorado is," coach Pete Cassidy said. "There's a tremendous concern on the part of all of us we want to go there and help."

Crosby named as coordinator

by Chuck Melvin
The Associated Press

BEREA, Ohio - The Cleveland Browns promoted running backs coach Steve Crosby to offensive coordinator on Tuesday, giving him the title to go with the role he played during the second half of the 1993 season.

Crosby, 43, coached the Browns' running backs for one year under Marty Schottenheimer in 1985 and returned to that job when Bill Belichick became Cleveland's head coach in 1991. A former New York Giants running back, Crosby also has worked as an assistant coach with Miami, Atlanta and New England.

He assumed the position, but not the title, of offensive coordinator at midseason, about the same time Vinny Testaverde was Bernie Kosar as the Browns' starting quarterback. Crosby called the Browns' plays during the second half of the year.

Belichick did not have an offensive coordinator during his first three seasons as head coach, a situation that Crosby said led to excessively long meetings among offensive coaches as they worked out weekly game plans.

"Ultimately you'll have one person making the decision on how we're going to do things," Crosby said. "Sometimes when it's not done that way ... it's like having too many generals and not enough privates. Somebody's shooting, and somebody's retreating."

"To be quite honest with you, this really eliminates those 2:30 in the morning meetings, when you discuss as a group all this stuff that comes up and there's nobody in there that says, 'Hey, here's how we're going to do it. End of conversation.' It gives a little bit more leadership."

Play-calling became a hot issue early in the season when Belichick reportedly objected to Kosar's changing of plays at the line of scrimmage.

Crosby began calling the plays soon after Kosar was cut in November, and the Browns' offense improved statistically over the final seven games, averaging 335 yards per game during that span compared with 263.7 yards per game in the first nine. Still, Cleveland lost five of those last seven.

Crosby said he and the rest of the coaching staff were in complete agreement when Belichick decided to release Kosar, even though Testaverde was sidelined by a separated shoulder at the time. The move left inexperienced Todd Philcox as Cleveland's starter temporarily.

"I think everybody agreed that we had a legitimate chance to win some games before Vinny got back," Crosby said. "It didn't work out the way we hoped it would."

Crosby said the Browns already have the personnel to be a good offensive team, and he has complete confidence in Testaverde, the former Heisman winner who has never had a winning season since coming to the NFL with Tampa Bay in 1987.

The Browns saw Testaverde at his best and worst this season. His final two passes were intercepted in a loss to New England that knocked Cleveland out of playoff contention, but he came back the next week to set an NFL record for accuracy by completing 21-of-23 passes against the Los Angeles Rams.

"I don't know what happened to Vinny in Tampa. I don't really care," Crosby said.

Stich upset in first round at Australia

The Associated Press

MELBOURNE, Australia -- Drawing from the past to focus on the present, Mary Pierce and MaliVai Washington won center-court matches Tuesday at the Australian Open. Hers was expected; his was a surprise.

Washington pulled off the biggest upset of the first round, ousting second seed Michael Stich in four sets. Pierce, the women's ninth seed, won easily over Natalia Baudone of Italy.

During his 7-6 (7-4), 6-3, 3-6, 6-2 victory, Washington let his thoughts wander back momentarily to the first round of the 1991 Australian Open when he squandered a two-set lead and lost to Stich.

This time, the Floridian didn't let Stich off the hook.

"It actually kind of inspired me, because I wasn't going to let the two-set-to-love lead get away like it did back in '91," he said. "It didn't get me nervous or play a negative role."

Pierce, who plays for France but also lives in Florida, is starting her first full year away from the verbal abuse of her dad and the controversy it generated in women's tennis. Jim Pierce has been banned by the Women's Tennis Association from attending her matches until the end of 1994.

After beating Baudone 6-2, 6-1, Pierce said it was good to be able to concentrate on tennis. But she said the travails of 1993 have helped her mature.

"It helped me a lot to learn things more in life on and off the court," said Pierce, who turned 19 on Saturday. "It made me a better person and I learned a lot. It made me mentally tougher also."

Fourth seed Stefan Edberg of Sweden, No. 6 Thomas Muster of Austria, No. 9 Todd Martin of the United States, No. 10 Magnus Gustafsson of Sweden, No. 12 Alexander Volkov of Russia, No. 13 Wayne Ferreira of South Africa and No. 16 Arnaud Boetsch of France all won first-round matches Tuesday.

Eighth seed Petr Korda of the Czech Republic joined Stich as an upset victim, losing in straight sets to Thomas Enqvist of Sweden.

Women's second seed Arantxa Sanchez Vicario of Spain dropped only four games while winning her first-round match and No. 10 Kimiko Date -- the first Japanese player to be ranked in the world's Top 10 -- lost just two games in advancing.

LARCHMONT, N.Y. -- Georgia athletic director Vince Dooley, who coached the Bulldogs to a national title in 1980, was one of two former coaches named to the College Football Hall of Fame along with 12 players.

The other coach was the late John Merritt of Jackson State and Tennessee State.

Tony Dorsett, the Heisman Trophy winner from Pittsburgh whose 6,082 career rushing yards is the most in NCAA Division I-A, led the list of players named Monday.

Others players chosen by the National Football Foundation were Bob Babich of Miami of Ohio, Steve Eisenhauer of Navy, Larry Elkins of Baylor, Pete Elliott of Michigan, Tucker Frederickson of Auburn, Jerry Groom of Notre Dame, John Hadl of Kansas, Gifford Nielsen of Brigham Young, Ozzie Newsome of Alabama, Marvin Powell of Southern Cal and Randy White of Maryland.

Dooley coached Georgia from 1964 to 1988, and at the time of his retirement ranked third nationally in victories.

BCA boycott avoided, Healthy Funderburke but far from resolved regaining role of leader

Saturday's college basketball games went off like clock work. No delays, no problems.

As the players took to the courts, along with their coaches, the NCAA gave a sigh of relief. The imminent dark cloud of the Black Coaches Association's planned boycott of major-college basketball games was diverted for the time being, but the issue that prompted this controversy is far from resolved.

The boycott, planned by the BCA, was sparked by a vote by the NCAA that kept the number of scholarships at 13. Two years ago the number of scholarships was reduced from 15. But that vote is just a small part of a problem that has been building between college coaches and the NCAA.

The problem stems from several different decisions that have steered the NCAA into a direction detrimental to the college basketball community. The reduction of the number of coaches from 5-4, the reduction of games from 27-26, the escalating academic standards and the reduction in scholarships are all part of the setbacks by the NCAA toward Division I basketball.

It's a trend that has sent 'red flags up' as to the direction the NCAA is taking in men's basketball, according to Bowling Green head coach Jim Larranaga.

"I think the question of the boycott is more than just dealing with an additional scholarship," Larranaga said. "The real issue is the direction of NCAA rules regarding the reduction of not just scholarships, but also increasing academic standards.

The reductions are made in the name of fiscal responsibility in trying to make ends meet for all universities. Some schools not only don't make money off of their athletic programs they lose money.

The irony of the situation is that the cuts are being made from the program that gives the NCAA 75 percent of its $172 million from last year.

The vote for the extra scholarship was defeated 191-119 and the Mid-American Conference was one of those opposing ballots cast. Based upon a tally of the 10 MAC schools taken a week before the vote, the conference office reported eight schools planned to oppose the increase in a scholarship. Therefore, they also voted against it.

But if there is not a resolution soon, the coaches may have no choice but to boycott. Unfortunately, the athletes may be the ones who will ultimately lose.

Glen Lubbert is managing editor The News.

COLUMBUS - His knees no longer ache. But Lawrence Funderburke still aches for the days when he was an integral part of a championship team.

Funderburke finally is in good health as he prepares for the stretch run of his college career, and he wants to go out of Ohio State the way he came in.

"The main thing is I want to win," said the 6-foot-9 senior forward from Columbus. "When we're not playing well, it hurts me because we have a team that's capable of finishing strong in the conference. I could have the greatest statistics in the world, but if the team's not doing well, then it's a direct reflection on me."

Funderburke had arthroscopic surgery on both knees June 9 to correct chronic tendinitis.

Even though doctors had said Funderburke would be ready to go when practice started, he wasn't. He couldn't play basketball for three months and was limited to lifting weights. He put on weight, getting as heavy as 255 pounds - 20 pounds more than his current weight - and was badly out of condition when practice started in November.

In the early portion of Ohio State's season, he looked slow and deliberate. No longer did he make a quick spin to the basket or beat a defender along the baseline. That left him shooting 15-foot fadeaways that hindered his rebounding.

Funderburke said his physical recovery moved along much more quickly than did his mental improvement.

"I definitely got off to a slow start," he said. "It was more mental. My knees were healthy, but I knew I had had surgery. My body didn't feel like it was ready to make the quick moves I was capable of making."

As Funderburke played himself into shape, the Buckeyes waited. In his place, redshirt freshman Gerald Eaker, junior Tony Watson and sophomore Nate Wilbourne shouldered most of the rebounding and inside defense.

In the last two weeks, Funderburke has returned to the form that saw him start as a sophomore on Ohio State's Big Ten Conference championship team two years ago after transferring from Indiana.

He had 16 points and nine rebounds at Wisconsin on Jan. 8, 16 points and 10 rebounds against Michigan on Jan. 13 and 17 points and four rebounds against Illinois on Saturday.

"Any time you come off double knee surgery, your biggest problem is starting and stopping and then jumping off a solid base. He's gaining more confidence daily."

Funderburke's performance was not enough to keep Ohio State from losing all three of those games. Now more is asked of him than ever before. Now Funderburke, who got kicked off his high school team as a senior for insubordination, must be the leader the Buckeyes are lacking.

"I'm taking every game a step at a time," he said. "The main thing is I want to win."
